

Writer's could improve reading comprehension on the part of their readers by, at the end of each sentence  $\mathfrak{S}$ , encoding the relative importance of  $\mathfrak{S}$  on any (or many) scales effecting ease of comprehension.

What's the shortest string of characters impossible to form by taking a block of proper English text, removing all the spaces and then taking some substring?